bergs." Let us now briefly glance at this future National Park, and show the reader that it is one of the most inviting spots for the summer tourist that America possesquiry, we will say that it can be reached by steam from Chicago, Buffalo and Detroit. A boat, the propeller Music, connects with the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad at Petoskey and makes daily trips to the island. A steamer also runs to Cheboygan. Reaching the island, the the fort with its whitewashed walls and the old flag floating over it, is the first thing on the programme. This fort is now garrisoned by 32 men under the Harry Brandenburg to Ezra and Mary the old flag floating over it, is the first command of Maj. Dickey. The sentinel pacing his beat, armed with a musket and arrayed in the war dress, and also the cannon peering over the parapet, suggest ravages of war, but the value of Mackinac from a military standpoint consists for the most part in its history. Leaving Fort Mackinac, a walk north for about half a mile brings us to the ruins of Fort during the War of 1812, and was named Fort George by them. When the Americans gained possession of the island they changed it to that of Holmes, in honor of Maj. Holmes, who was killed on the island. Nothing but the ruins of the fort remain, but in addition to the interset that these possess, the view from this spot is a most beautiful one. Beyond this point toward the northwest part of the island, the visitor finds the following objects of interest: The Soldiers' Cemetery, located in the woods, is a delightful spot.
